

MADAME NOIRE

HAIR Q&A: GOOD WEAVE HAIR AND FLAT IRON RECOMMENDATIONS

In our new Hair Q&A series with hair experts, we connect Madame Noire readers with various experts and stylists to answer their most pressing questions about hair care. In this edition, Annette Jones, founder of California Lace Wigs & Weaves, responds to a reader-submitted questions about buying quality hair for weaves and recommends flat iron brands. If you have a hair care issue you'd like to have addressed, Facebook us or email us at editors_at_madamenoire.com.

How do you spot "bad hair" for weaving? Or are there certain brands of remi that are really good? I have spent a few hundred twice and both times (2 different brands of remi) have been bad. I have have been experiencing and hearing a lot about people getting a "bad pack." -Nina B Bartending

Purchasing quality hair can be tricky, it's so important to find a store, supplier or retailer that is reputable – always be sure they are well known for supplying top quality human hair. My recommendation is to ask questions of the supplier/retailer, talk to their customers and be sure to research the product before investing. You want to make sure the hair is not mixed with synthetic fibers or fillers. More importantly, you want to make sure the hair is not silicone treated (non-remy hair). It's difficult to know exactly what you are buying when it's so nicely packaged and the price is comparable to what is considered expensive or high end. Sad to say, so remy hair is being sold as 100% remy

In our new Hair Q&A series with hair experts, we connect Madame Noire readers with various experts and stylists to answer their most pressing questions about hair care. In this edition, Annette Jones, founder of California Lace Wigs & Weaves, responds to a reader-submitted questions about buying quality hair for weaves and recommends flat iron brands. If you have a hair care issue you'd like to have addressed, Facebook us or email us at editors_at_madamenoire.com.

Both get the hair straight and leave it with a really smooth finish. These heating tools are a little pricy but well worth it because they both offer a technology that straightens the hair without damage and locks in moisture without overly heating.